

Dr Konstantinos Grivas is a Professor at the sector “War Theory and Analysis” at the Hellenic Military Academy and teaches geopolitics and modern military technologies. Also teaches Geography of Security at the Turkish and Modern Asian Studies Department of the University of Athens. As a lecturer and visiting professor teaches at the National Defense College for high rank officers of the three branches of the Hellenic Armed Forces, at the National Security College for high rank officers of the Hellenic National Police and at the War College of the Hellenic Air Force. In the past, he has held the post of chief investigator at the department of modern weapon technologies of the Institute of Defense Analysis of the Hellenic Ministry of Defense. Between 1996 and 2004 he was an accredited journalist at the Hellenic Ministry of Defense. He also worked as special advisor to the former Minister of Defense Panos Beglitis.. He speaks Spanish and English. He served his military service at the 2nd Paratroops Battalion.

SCIENTIFIC BOOKS (in Greek language)

1. "War in the 21st century in the 21st century," Epikinonies editions, May 1999.
2. This study examines issues of advanced weapon technologies and potential geopolitical applications of them.
3. (Jointly with Zacharias Michas) "2021, Greek Defence Strategy for the 21st Century"), Castalia editions, August 2006. This study examines issues of new weapon technologies and geo-political issues in Greek-Turkish security system.
4. "Thor's Hammer. Advanced missiles and weapons for the 21st century"), published by the Institute for Defence Analysis, Ministry of Defence, Athens, 2007. This study examines the technological developments in the field of artillery systems, it studies the meaning of projectile - centric warfare as a subcategory of network centric warfare.
5. "The nightmare awakening. Nuclear war in the 21st Century ", Oxy editions, Athens 2007. This study examines nuclear weapons technology, conventional impact strategic weapons and anti-ballistic systems and their geopolitical consequences for the international system.
6. "The end of oil and the beginning of a new US Geostrategy", Livanis editions, May 2008. This study examines new energy technologies stemming from military research and development and examines their geopolitical consequences in the international system.
7. "The Military Rise of China and the Geopolitics of War in Middle East"), Livanis editions, May 2013. This study examines new weapons technologies developed mainly by China and other countries of the world and considers how these can form a new geopolitical reality in the international system.
8. "Cluster Weapons, Legitimate and Illegitimate Wars, and Humanitarian Imperialism. The dialectical nexus of cluster weapons and point precision strike weapons within the International Geography of Modern Weapon Power", Livanis editions, November 2014. This study examines the interactive relationship between cluster weapons and ultrahigh precision PGMs and studies the geopolitical consequences of this interaction.
9. "The New Military Revolution and the Hellenic Defense Strategy", Livanis editions, December 2019.

SCIENTIFIC MONOGRAPHS (in Greek language)

“The Anti-Ballistic Threat”, Defence Analyses Institute (DAI) of the Hellenic Ministry of Defence. Bulletin, No. 158, Technology and Defence Section, October 16, 2000. This paper studies the geopolitical consequences of the development of anti-ballistic weapons by the USA.

PARTICIPATION IN COLLECTIVE VOLUMES (in Greek language)

“Geopolitical and Technological Factors in the Formation of Future Greek Naval Forces and the Role of Surface Ships”. Hellenic Naval Academy, Athens, 2013. This study examines new technologies in naval systems, which combined with the geopolitics of the Greek-Turkish confrontation system can impact on the design of a new naval surface ship for the Hellenic Navy.